Women and Climate Justice Theme
The climate crisis is accelerating rapidly. It is now urgent for us to share sound scientific information on the dangers and impacts of the crisis, cultivate the leadership needed to confront it, and work for climate justice. Climate justice asks us to change systems that generate inequalities and keep us from taking steps that are even now within our reach. As traditional providers for the needs of the household, women are among those most affected by the crisis in Asia, yet they are also the least likely to hold decision-making power on climate issues. SENS 2021 aims to help correct this imbalance by supporting women to lead in this area. Our program in 2021 will welcome both women and men, while giving priority to women.

The COVID-19 pandemic has shown us what social chaos and collapsing systems look like. Yet the climate crisis is not far behind, and will likely be much worse. There is much we can do to prepare, to build solidarity, and to avoid the worst outcomes of climate change. All of this requires building a network, for which English can play a key role.

Health and Safety Precautions
COVID-19 has been well contained in Thailand, yet there may still be restrictions on travel in May 2021. We are well-prepared to make this program successful, while keeping everyone safe.
- If quarantine is required for citizens of your country arriving in Thailand in May, we will arrange your travel to an approved quarantine facility.
- During quarantine we will arrange for food and housing, and offer online instruction as well.
- We will then carry on with an in-person course as planned, following the quarantine period.
- We encourage you to apply, even if we cannot yet be absolutely sure that travel from your country will be possible in May of 2021.

What Our Graduates Say about SENS
This course creates a safe, encouraging, and loving space in which I am accepted the way I am, and I am free to be authentic to myself and others, so that I feel confident enough to live in harmony with people from within my own personality!

Since I became a part of SENS 2020, English has been more meaningful to me. English helps me to build relationships—which is a source of my happiness—even with people who don’t speak my mother tongue. Never before had I thought that I could make friends with foreign people, that I could laugh and cry together with foreign friends and that we could support each other from the top of our heart—all in English. Because I want to understand my friends as much as I can, English is now of vital importance to me. SENS is a bridge that connects English and other people to me in a natural way.

Le Ha Anh Thy, Vietnam

Social work is not my job, it’s my passion, because I have also faced caste discrimination as a member of the Dalit community. From this program I learned that we have similar problems all over the world, and we need to come together to change our societies.

Raj Kumar, Chhattisgarh, India

I am a woman who is looking for changes for myself and for my communities. And SENS made this possible.

We come together from different cultural backgrounds, religions, ethnicities and countries to learn from each other and listen to each other. This is a message from SENS that everyone in the world should receive and act on. We are ordinary people from different corners of the world who lack political and financial power, but we are a group of people who believe that we can and we will contribute something to the world with the power of compassion.

From SENS, I learned the importance of listening, which is the primary ability we human beings have, but it seems we have forgotten it for a very long time. Here we value different traditions, religions, and personal opinions and honor them through listening. Listening is the foundation of respect, listening is the basis of trust, listening is the bridge between different opinions, listening is the key to peace and harmony. Listening is the only way lovers, friends, families, communities, religions, nationalities, countries, and the world can heal.
